Steve, here's a good one for you. Not work related

Had a problem with my washing machine at home, being mechanically minded, I decided I could carry out repair myself. I turned water off and unplugged machine, all the usual safety things I would carry out on any work related job, even put towels down to protect surface and prevent the machine slipping when I turned it on it's front.

I was removing drive belt and as I slid it off the pulley my hand slipped, and brushed against the back of the drum. I then realised there was a deep cut down to the bone across one of my knuckles. after cleaning and dressing it, My wife commented "you would have been wearing gloves at work, doing similar task, why were you not wearing them now? as they are sat there in your tool bag"

She had a point, they were right next to me but I didn't think about putting them on.

I got the replacement parts today and as I was fitting them my wife came in and said "learnt your lesson then?" seeing that I was wearing gloves at the time.

Its not only at work when you have to think "safety"
